

The 2nd World Conference on Cultural Studies

Manchester, United Kingdom

18 - 20 October 2024

Religion and Environment

Pushpa Debnath
Tripura University, India

Abstract

Religion is a great rule of the environment which is played by rules and regulations. It is a systematic way of the natural environment of cause and effective theory that causes living beings that are conglomerated with the four elements such as air, fair, earth and water. There is no being that is out of these four elements. The environment is also conglomerated with these four elements as well. Religion is a way of trusting something that is mentally well-formed but there are some religions which play against the environment which is not acceptable for a proper religious meaning. It plays a vital role for beings wholesome and unwholesome actions which are driven through the physical forms. Religion plays a great rule through the environmental way of consequence that is called the fruition of cause and effective theory. We can directly express it by our own mental sentiment, which is an effective theory of our own action which is called “Environment” and “Religion”. Religions and the environment are involved with each other and we cannot separate from each other. They are interconnected between moral conduct. Religion and environment are the way of living in a peaceful manner.

Keywords: precepts, respect, believe, threefold morality, manner, peace.